ROBERTS' INDIANS.

He Will Exhibit Them at the Mining Camp.

Oliver Roberts is now assembling his talent for his big Indian Show at the Mid-winter Fair. He will run a theatrical Indian Show in the '49 Mining Camp and also have Scalp and Medicine dances in an enclosure where there will be a regular Indian encampment. There the Indians will be plying their regular industries making basket work, bead work, trophies and weapons of war. This will be one of the most interesting exhibits at the Fair. The following Indians have been already engaged: Big-Cut-in-the-face, Black Cloud, Little Man, Ta Hoo, Falling Leaf, Mahoe, Rattle-Snake-in-his-Legs, Small Eyes, Red Dog, Hide-Behind-Rocks, Hail Stone-in-his-Stomach, Coyote Boy.

These are the regular names of the savages Roberts has engaged, but when he wants one he don't stop to run the hyphenated appellations, but says, "Here Pete," "I say, Jim" etc. etc.

The Indians with their gorgeous trappings will fall on San Francisco Sunday morning and march up Market street directly to the '46 camp, where they will pitch their tents and take up winter quarters.

From Empire.

Empire, Nov. 28, 1893.

The present storm has brought ducks and geese to the river in immense quantities, but Empire and Brunswick have boys and shotguns enough to make it uncomfortable for them. The school will be closed this week and the ducks and geese will suffer. Some of our boys are in training for Wiggins' shooting match, and are practicing throwing at ducks, having decapitated a dozen decoys, but decoy ducks don't duck when the stick is thrown. Wiggins is going to give a free lunch to the shooters, spectators, and everybody who cares to partake of it. He is going to stuff an 800-pound beef with turkeys which will be stuffed with fresh oysters. The beef with this novel stuffing will be barbecued on Dead Man's island, if the weather permits. The river raised to such a pitch last night that Jim's pontoon bridge dragged its anchor and is on its way to the Sink, but the anchor is still here. Arthur Morris has kindly tendered him the use of his beautiful yacht, the Nonpareil, which he will use for a ferry on the 29th and 30th; and if the crack shots find shooting twenty pound turkeys too slow, he will take them to the Mexican dam where they can angle for trout. He will furnish tackle, bait and other necessities. He says every reasonable man must go away with an "I will come again" feeling.

Prof. McDiarmid and Miss Mamie Hickey, teachers in the Empire school are going to attend the Teachers' Institute.

Hank May, who has been laid up with a grippie and rheumatism for over a month, is able to be around again. The mills are all running a little. The town is unusually quiet, no deaths, births, foot-races, fights or law suits for a whole week.

NEIL MAHER.

Tonight's Ball.

Tonight Armory Hall will contain a crowd of jolly dancers, the occasion of the Workmen's ball. No pains have been spared to make it a top notch affair, and as the music will be under the leadership of Prof. Zimmer, it will be all that anybody would ask for.

RENO AROUSED.

Jim Yerington's Reception by the Riverside People.

From all accounts Reno is getting roused up in good shape on Fair matters. Jim Yerington Nevada's World's Fair Commissioner was tendered a rousing reception there on Sunday night.

The following is from the Gazette: In pursuance to the proceedings of the meeting held at the Nevada Bank Saturday night, the reception to James A. Yerington, Nevada's exhibitor at the World's Fair was given at the Riverside Hotel last night.

The train from the east was one hour and thirty-five minutes late, and it was nearly 10 o'clock before it arrived. There was quite a crowd at the depot, including a large crowd from Carson who had come down to participate in the festivities. The young man who did so much to advertise to the world the wonderful resources of our State was warmly welcomed, and the ovation he received was such as demonstrated the appreciation of our citizens of the efforts he had so successfully made in their behalf.

A procession headed by Hastings' band escorted the City's guest to the Riverside Hotel, where, after a few airs were played, the invited guests to the number of about fifty, filled into the dining room, where a magnificent collation was spread.

Toastmaster W. H. A. Pike, after explaining the object of the assemblage, called upon Mr Yerington for a report of his stewardship. Mr. Yerington was greeted with a hearty round of applause upon arising from his seat. He said it was impossible to express in words his appreciation of the feeling so emphatically expressed by this unexpected company, and then proceeded to give a detailed account of what he had done. He modestly explained his work at Chicago. He said that although Nevada was rather late in getting there he put in his best licks, or as he expressively described it, "he was determined to try to get there with both feet." Although Nevada's exhibit was the smallest of all the States she, nevertheless, got away with thirty-four premiums, a larger amount in proportion to the population than any State in the Union, or country in the world. He said that the impression prevailed that Nevada was only a mineral producing State, but he flattered himself that the exhibit of agricultural products was convincing proof that the battle born State could hold her own as a producer from the soil with any of her sisters in the Union from the Atlantic to the Pacific Coast; that she was anything but a "rotten borough," and that her future was as bright as that of any commonwealth that has ever been organized under the banner of the American Republic.

The speaker was frequently interrupted by applause, and when he closed it was some time before the presiding officer could proceed with the impromptu program.

Toastmaster Pike then called upon Dr. Bergstein to give his views as to what Nevada should do in regard to the Midwinter fair. The doctor responded in an eloquent speech, the gist of which was that the State should be represented there by the same exhibitor as had reflected so much credit upon her at the Columbian Exposition. The suggestion was received by a hearty round of applause.

Hon. George Russell, Commissioner to the Fair, upon being called upon gave an interesting account of his connection with the Exposition, paid a glowing tribute to Mr. Yerington, and set forth the agricultural resources of the State in a most masterly manner, interlarding his remarks with humorous hits which added greatly to the hilarity of the occasion.

Dr. Patterson was the next speaker. He, like those who preceded him, dwelt largely upon the agricultural resources of the State. He thought we had relied too much on our mineral products, to the neglect of the farming industry which he regarded as the great source of our future wealth. The doctor's discourse was a perfect epitome of scientific possibilities so far as the soil and the climate of the State is concerned.

The toastmaster then called upon Major J. H. Dennis to respond to a sentiment proposed to the press of Nevada. The Major reluctantly arose, and modestly stated that he came to the banquet under the express stipulation that he was not to be called upon to make a speech. He said that too much was expected of him, that he had been busily engaged for several days writing the speeches of those who had preceded and those who were yet to speak and that he had had no time to prepare a speech for himself. (Great laughter.) He said he was forced to admit that he was once a member of the press gang, but that he had reformed and was now the trusted and honored attorney of the Salvation Army. He made a characteristically humorous speech but ended with a glowing tribute to the press of Nevada, which he declared would compare favorably in ability and honesty with that of any section where the English language was spoken or mutilated.

Hon. W. J. Westerfield gave an interesting relation of his visit to the World's Fair. He spoke enthusiastically of Nevada's exhibit and her exhibitor, and seconded the motion that Mr Yerington be selected to represent the State at the Midwinter Exposition in San Francisco.

B. F. Leete also suggested that the people of Nevada should not depend upon the mining industry alone but that the heretofore neglected agricultural industry should receive proper attention, as it was evidently the great source of our future wealth. He asked that Mr. Yerington be endorsed as our representative at the Midwinter Fair, and upon putting the question it was carried unanimously.

Mr. Yerington expressed in fitting terms his appreciation of the double honor conferred upon him. He spoke eloquently of the assistance he had received from John Ernst whom he introduced to the company, and who responded in a neat speech which satisfied the assemblage that he was deserving of the compliment paid him by his chief.

C. A. Jones spoke for the legal fraternity, which he unblushingly declared was not d for its veracity and general integrity. He, however, redeemed himself by making an excellent speech replete with sense and logic, ending with an eloquent tribute to his personal friend, the guest of the evening.

Toastmaster Pike then stated that the hour was late, and was proceeding to close the festivities when he was interrupted by Major Dennis, who stated that there was an important omission in the evening's program. He was a little tenacious of the rights and recognition of the generation which was passing on the downward grade into the Dark Valley; that all honor had been done to the guest of the evening, but that no reference had been made to his venerable progenitor who was seated by his side. He was quite certain that but for H. M. Yerington there would have been no Jim Yerington, and while it was meet and proper that the worthy son should be honored, it was no reason why his illustrious sire should be ignored. The suggestion was received with vociferous applause, and there was a unanimous call for the silver-haired patriarch, who responded in a feeling and most appropriate speech, in which he spoke eloquently of his love for Nevada and her people, evincing at the same time a pardonable pride in the son in whose honor the assemblage was held.

After some appropriate remarks from Mr. Jones of the Carson Mint, who spoke for the representatives from the Capital City, the proceedings were closed with three hearty cheers and a tiger for Jim Yerington.
